Constructability

The What, When, Why and How

What is constructability? When should it be done and by whom? How? What should it consider? Is it ever too soon? Are review expectations too high from owners? Is it necessary for all procurement paths like design build? Do we need this on a project that utilizes BIM or is BIM a requirement? What team members should we expect to be involved?

This seminar is to address questions like those above and more. Learn from CM's, contractors and owners how these questions are addressed and the delivery product, the benefits and gains from an appropriate constructability review, how it helps the project from a risk mitigation perspective. Learn what an owner expects from their team and what repercussions can occur if this review is ignored. You should leave the session with a decent understanding of the constructability process.

Learning Objectives

- When to carry out the review
- Team members to include
- Level of review
- Suitable procurement paths that require a review and how that differs
- Role of architect
- Formal vs informal
- Small firm vs large firm
